This week's VoteTopic:

In a challenging but much-needed conversation, you considered whether we talk enough about consent. Here's what you thought:

Do we talk enough about consent?

"Consent should be discussed more as many people don't understand what consent is and when they are pushing someone's consent."

"We do talk about consent a lot, but how many people actually act on it? If we talk about it a lot, how come it still happens?"

With a little over a week until local elections take place, we wanted to hear your take on them! So, in your sessions this week you will be discussing:

Do we underestimate the impact of local elections?

Discussion points:

- Are there some local issues that are equally as important as nationwide issues?
- Do you agree that this year's local elections are especially important? Why/why not?
- Do you think that local elections are as significant as general elections?

Student research points:

- Explore the Electoral Commission's website to find out about which elections are happening in your area.
- Find out more about the issues that people are concerned about where you live.
- Investigate the policies and manifestoes of political candidates in your county, town, city, nation or district.

Please Note:

Next week, we will be covering Mental Health Awareness Week.
